This Month in A.A. History September

September, 1939 — A.A. comes to Chicago Click to link to story.

The first A.A. group in Chicago was founded on September, 1939. This is particularly interesting because A.A. was still extremely young: the Big Book had only been published a few months earlier, and there were only a handful of established groups in the country.

September 21, 1938 — Works Publishing Company is formed

Bill W. and Hank P. formed Works Publishing Company to publish the book that would become Alcoholics Anonymous. This was an important step because Bill and the early members were trying to get their message into the hands of alcoholics beyond the three small centers in Akron, New York and Cleveland.

September 30, 1939 — Morris Markey's article, "Alcoholics and God," appeared in Liberty magazine.

September 13, 1937 — Florence R. becomes the first woman in New York A.A. Click for a link to the Story of the first women of AA in NY.

Florence R. is identified in A.A. historical timelines as the first woman in A.A. in New York. It's a nice reminder that women were part of the Fellowship very early in its development.

September 24, 1940 — Bill W. makes an important 12th-Step call

Bill made a 12th-Step visit to Bobbie B., who subsequently became the secretary of the New York A.A. office, replacing Ruth Hock.

September 1946 — A.A. reaches Mexico

The first A.A. group in Mexico was established in September 1946. By this point the Fellowship was beginning to spread internationally in earnest.

September 1949 — The Grapevine changes format

The A.A. Grapevine was published in a pocketbook-size format for the first time.

The Article That Helped Put A.A. on the Map

"Alcoholics and God" — Morris Markey, Liberty Magazine, September 30, 1939

In September 1939, Alcoholics Anonymous was still a very small and uncertain fellowship. The Big Book had been published only a few months earlier, but there was little money to promote it and very few people outside the small A.A. groups in Akron, Cleveland and New York had ever heard of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Then something happened that changed the course of A.A. history.

A national magazine published a story about the new fellowship.

The magazine was Liberty, a popular weekly publication with a large national readership. The writer was Morris Markey, an experienced feature writer. His article was titled "Alcoholics and God." It appeared on September 30, 1939, and became the first major national magazine article about Alcoholics Anonymous.

How did it happen?

The story began with Charles B. Towns, owner of Towns Hospital in New York, where Bill W. had gotten sober. Towns had known Markey for years and became convinced that A.A. needed publicity. He introduced Markey to the story of this strange new fellowship of alcoholics who were helping one another stay sober.

Markey was intrigued.

He approached Fulton Oursler, editor of Liberty, about doing a story on Alcoholics Anonymous. Oursler immediately saw the possibilities and commissioned Markey to write it. Oursler would eventually become an important friend of A.A. and later served as a trustee of the Alcoholic Foundation.

Markey's article presented alcoholism in a way that was quite unusual for its time. Rather than simply describing drunkenness as a moral failure or lack of willpower, he described the alcoholic as someone who could become physically and psychologically unable to control his drinking.

The article also described the remarkable idea at the heart of A.A.: that one alcoholic could help another alcoholic in a way that doctors, hospitals and good intentions often could not.

And then came the part that nobody at A.A. expected.

The letters began arriving

When Liberty hit the newsstands, the response was immediate.

Approximately 800 urgent pleas for help poured into the A.A. office from alcoholics and their families. This was an astonishing number for a fellowship that probably had no more than about 500 members at the time.

Remember what that meant in 1939.

There was no A.A. website.

No Internet.

No 24-hour answering service.

No national directory of meetings.

No Central Office network such as we know today.

There were only a few A.A. groups scattered around the country, and some people seeking help could be hundreds of miles from the nearest member.

The letters nevertheless had to be answered.

And that job fell largely to Ruth Hock, A.A.'s first secretary.

Bill W. later remembered that Ruth wrote personal letters to every person who contacted them. The letters included information about the new A.A. book and, whenever possible, referred the writer to an A.A. member or group nearby.

The Big Book orders followed

Something else happened as a result of the article.

People began ordering the newly published Alcoholics Anonymous book.

According to A.A.'s own historical account, sales of the Big Book increased by several hundred following the Liberty article. Bill later described this period as the moment when they finally felt that perhaps they had "turned the corner."

But the most important result wasn't the money from book sales.

It was the correspondence.

The letters connected the tiny New York office with alcoholics and families all over the country. Those contacts helped A.A. members find one another, and new groups began forming.

In other words, the article didn't simply tell America about A.A.

It helped alcoholics find A.A.

Bill W. wasn't crazy about the article

There is an amusing footnote to the story.

Bill W. wasn't particularly enthusiastic about the title "Alcoholics and God." He thought the article was somewhat lurid and worried that the title might frighten away some people who were already uncomfortable with anything that sounded overtly religious.

History, however, had the last word.

Whatever Bill thought about the title, the article accomplished something extraordinary. It brought A.A. to the attention of thousands of people at exactly the moment when the fledgling Fellowship desperately needed to be discovered.

A small fellowship begins to grow

It is easy today to look backward at Alcoholics Anonymous and imagine that its growth was inevitable.

It wasn't.

In 1939, A.A. was fragile. The Big Book had just been published. There were only a few hundred members. The organization had very little money. Many people had never heard of it, and even those who had often had no idea where to find a meeting.

Then, in one September issue of a national magazine, the story of A.A. reached a much larger audience.

About 800 people reached back.

Some wanted help for themselves. Others were writing about a husband, wife, brother, sister, friend or parent.

Ruth Hock answered them.

Bill W. and other A.A. members followed up.

Books were ordered.

Members were contacted.

Groups began to form.

And the message traveled a little farther.

From 800 letters to millions of alcoholics

The Liberty article would not be the last major piece of national publicity A.A. received. In March 1941, Jack Alexander's famous article in The Saturday Evening Post would bring A.A. an even greater wave of attention and help propel membership from roughly 2,000 to 8,000 within a year.

But "Alcoholics and God" came first.

It was one of the first moments when the Fellowship stepped beyond its small circle of members and introduced itself to America.

And perhaps the most important lesson from that September day in 1939 is a simple one:

The article was only the beginning.

The real work started when the letters arrived.

Someone had to answer them.

Someone had to make a phone call.

Someone had to meet a stranger.

Someone had to take another alcoholic to a meeting.

Someone had to say, "I was where you are. Let me tell you what happened to me."

That is how A.A. grew.

One alcoholic at a time.

And it all began with a magazine article—and 800 people who were willing to ask for help.

Historical note: A.A.'s official timeline identifies "Alcoholics and God" as the September 30, 1939 Liberty article and says it generated 800 pleas for help while increasing Big Book sales by several hundred. A.A. Grapevine's historical account likewise describes it as the first national article about A.A. and notes the approximately 800 letters that followed.

A.A. history sources commonly list September 1, 1939 as the founding of the first Chicago group, but the Chicago group's own historical material gives September 20, 1939 as the date of its first formal meeting. So for this newsletter, I explained this distinction rather than simply state September 1 as an undisputed meeting date.

When A.A. Came to Chicago

September 1939 — The Beginning of a Great A.A. Story

In the summer of 1937, Alcoholics Anonymous was barely two years old. The Fellowship had begun with the meeting of Bill W., a New York stockbroker, and Dr. Bob, an Akron surgeon, and there were still only a handful of A.A. members.

But by 1939 the message was beginning to travel.

One of the people who carried that message out of Akron was a man who would become known in the early Chicago history simply as "No. 1." He was living in Evanston, Illinois, just north of Chicago. Having learned about A.A. in Akron, he returned home determined to find another alcoholic who could be helped by the program.

He tried.

And tried.

And tried.

But nothing seemed to happen.

He eventually went back to Akron and asked Dr. Bob what he was doing wrong. Why wasn't an A.A. group forming in Chicago?

Dr. Bob's answer was remarkably simple:

"When the time is ripe for a group in Chicago, you'll have one."

And Dr. Bob was right.

The time became ripe

Over the next two years, "No. 1" continued carrying the A.A. message. Slowly, other alcoholics were finding sobriety.

By September 1st, 1939, there were five A.A.s in the Chicago area, four of whom had gotten sober through contact with Akron. The small group was finally ready to come together.

The first meetings were held in the home of "No. 1" in Evanston.

A.A. historical timelines traditionally mark September 1, 1939, as the date the first Chicago group was founded. But the Chicago group's own early history records September 20, 1939, as the date of its first formal meeting, with regular weekly meetings beginning at that time.

Either way, September 1939 marks an important moment: A.A. had taken root in Chicago.

And the people involved immediately understood that they had an obligation to do more than simply stay sober themselves.

The first Chicago A.A. group met in Earl Treat's Evanston apartment on September 1st or 20th, 1939. Then, in October, the group established its first downtown meeting place in the Medical & Dental Arts Building at Lake and Wabash. The early Chicago history specifically describes this as the group's first downtown home.

The building still exists today as MDA City Apartments, at what is now 185 N. Wabash. It was completed in 1927. So this is where those early Chicago A.A.s gathered.

"We have to make A.A. available"

At one of those early gatherings, the members discussed an important question:

How could they make A.A. available to alcoholics throughout the Chicago area?

They knew that six or so sober alcoholics sitting together in a private home wasn't enough.

They needed a place where people could find them.

The answer was to establish a meeting place in downtown Chicago—in the Loop.

That first downtown location was in the Medical and Dental Arts Building at Lake and Wabash. The group began meeting there in October 1939.

It is difficult to appreciate today how ambitious that decision was.

There was no Chicago Central Office.

There was no meeting directory.

There was no website.

There was no 24-hour telephone line.

(Chicago: Continued on page 5)

There wasn't even a large network of A.A. groups to help them figure out how to do it.

There were just a handful of sober alcoholics who believed that what had worked for them could work for somebody else.

Chicago becomes a center of A.A. growth

Chicago's location turned out to be enormously important.

It was a major transportation and communications center, and A.A. members traveling through Chicago carried the message farther into the Midwest.

The Chicago group grew rapidly.

By the following years, Chicago would become one of the great early centers of Alcoholics Anonymous. Its influence eventually reached throughout Illinois and into neighboring states, including Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and beyond.

The Chicago Archives today hold correspondence dating back to 1939, including early membership lists, letters, photographs, books, magazines and other records documenting those first years.

And there is another remarkable part of the Chicago story.

Chicago helped carry A.A. to the rest of America

When reporter Jack Alexander began investigating Alcoholics Anonymous for The Saturday Evening Post in 1940, he visited the established A.A. centers—including Chicago.

Alexander was initially skeptical. But Chicago's members made an impression on him, particularly because several of them were newspaper people themselves. As the historical account puts it, these were people who “talked my language.”

Alexander's resulting article, published March 1, 1941, became one of the most important pieces of publicity in A.A. history. Thousands of people contacted A.A., and hundreds of Big Books were sold as a result.

So the little group that had struggled to get started in Evanston in 1939 would soon play a role in helping introduce Alcoholics Anonymous to an enormous national audience.

A lesson from Chicago

There is something especially appropriate about the story of A.A. coming to Chicago.

The first man tried to start a group.

Nothing happened.

He went back to Dr. Bob.

Dr. Bob told him to wait.

He went home and kept carrying the message.

Eventually, the people came together.

The time was ripe.

That's often how A.A. works.

We don't always get to decide when the seed we plant will grow.
We simply plant it.

One alcoholic talks to another.

One person shares his experience.

Another person listens.

A meeting starts in somebody's living room.

Then another meeting.

Then another.

And eventually, what began with a handful of people can become something that reaches thousands.

In September 1939, Chicago had only a few sober alcoholics.

Today, the Chicago A.A. community is enormous.

But it began with a very small group of people who had discovered something worth passing on.

They didn't have much.

They had their sobriety.

They had each other.

And they had the message.

That was enough.

SAFETY CARD FOR A.A. GROUPS

(The General Service Office has made this optional statement available as an A.A. service piece for those groups who wish to use it.)

Suggested Statement on Safety

Our group endeavors to provide a safe meeting place for all attendees and encourages each person here to contribute to fostering a secure and welcoming environment in which our meetings can take place. As our Traditions remind us, the formation and operation of an A.A. group resides with the group conscience. Therefore, we ask that group members and others refrain from any behavior which might compromise another person's safety.

Also, please take the precautions you feel are necessary to ensure your own personal safety, for example, walking to your car in a group after a meeting. If a situation should arise where someone feels their safety is in jeopardy, or the situation breaches the law, the individuals involved should take appropriate action. Calling the proper authorities does not go against any A.A. Traditions and is recommended when someone may have broken the law or endangered the safety of another person.
